

Eliminating Redundancy #1

Trust is the most essential ingredient in a good friendship. (1) You can have the same goals and the same dreams and the same likes and dislikes. but if there is not trust, the friendship will falter. For some people, trust comes easily. (2) Sure, you might get an unwanted surprise every now and again or once and a while. but at least you're giving friendships the best chance they've got to succeed.

Everyone gets angry occasionally. If you have a great friend, it's normal to get in arguments occasionally. Something that's usually sorted out in a jiffy with a bit of communication. (3) If your friend has a history of being deceitful, you're wise to watch your back..

The difference (4) between normal friend fights and abnormal friend fights is this: truly bad friends experience anger with practically every person that is their friend..

The trouble is, when you're in the middle of an angry fight, you lose all sense of perspective. (5) Anger is an incredibly powerful and strong emotion.

1. A. NO CHANGE
B. You can have the same goals and dreams and likes and dislikes,
C. You can have the same goals, dreams, likes, and dislikes
D. Your goals and your dreams and your likes and dislikes can be the same,
2. A. NO CHANGE
B. you might get an unwanted surprise every now and again,
C. you might get a very unwanted significant surprise every now and again,
D. you might get an unwanted surprise every now and again or once and a while or ever so often,
3. A. NO CHANGE
B. If your friend has a long-time history of lying,
C. If your friend has a history of lying or being deceitful,
D. If your friend or buddy, has a long drawn out history and background of lying,
4. A. NO CHANGE
B. The difference between really normal friend fights and really abnormal friend fights is this:
C. The difference between normal and abnormal friend fights is this:
D. The contrast and difference between normal and abnormal friend fights is this:
5. A. NO CHANGE
B. Anger is an incredibly powerful emotion.
C. Anger is an amazingly, incredibly powerful emotion.
D. Anger is an emotion.